Act of interdisciplinary and humanistic commitment to improve Oral Health in Rome, at the Chamber of Deputies, 26 June 2026.

We, the undersigned Scientific Societies, representing the field of medicine, surgery, public health and health science, affirm that oral health is an essential component of general health, wellbeing and quality of life.

We recognize the growing body of scientific evidence demonstrating the association between periodontitis and major systemic conditions, particularly diabetes and cardiovascular diseases.

Guided by the principles of prevention, scientific integrity, clinical appropriateness we promote a vision of healthcare founded on interdisciplinary collaboration, the integration of professional expertise and the application of the best available scientific evidence.

With this Manifesto, we intend to foster greater scientific and clinical attention to the prevention and early diagnosis of oral pathologies, enhancing their potential contribution within a comprehensive approach to safeguarding a person's overall health.
